

TGV is voted one of the best companies to work for in Argentina

Buenos Aires, October 2012.- TGV, Excelencia en Soluciones Informáticas, was chosen for the eighth consecutive year as one of the best companies to work for in Argentina by the prestigious business magazine Apertura.

The ranking of the best employers in Argentina is based on a structured survey carried out in five thematic areas: professional career, compensation, work environment, hours and conditions, and training.

TGV ranked 26th this year in the segment of companies led by Google and Microsoft respectively.

Throughout 2012, TGV's Human Resources Management implemented HR practices that had been under development during previous years, such as English-language training on site, casual Friday, flexible hours and career planning based on professional profiles. New recreational activities and team-building initiatives were also incorporated, including a Family Day, seasonal celebrations like Spring-related festivities and thematic after-hour gatherings for younger employees.

"At TGV, we consider it to be very important to be aware of people's need, not only in terms of their professional growth and training, but also in regard to the details that can help make the day-to-day routine more pleasant. This year we welcomed employees with fruit baskets or instant soups on cold winter mornings or delivered an afternoon snack at their desks," said Marta Vicena, Director.

TGV's ongoing efforts to improve the internal work environment for its people have made it possible for the company to ensure itself a position in Apertura's annual ranking of Argentina's Best Employers—year in, year out—since 2005
